ABOUT SIA

Sia, an Australian singer-songwriter, began her career in the 1990s with the band Crisp. After the band's disbandment, she released her first solo album, "OnlySee." She gained recognition as a vocalist for the British duo Zero 7 and continued her solo career with albums like "Healing Is Difficult" and "Colour the Small One."

In 2014, Sia re-emerged as a solo artist with the critically acclaimed album "1000 Forms of Fear," featuring hits like "Chandelier." Known for her distinctive style and face-covering wigs, she released subsequent albums like "This Is Acting" and "Everyday Is Christmas."

Beyond her solo work, Sia formed the supergroup LSD with Labrinth and Diplo. She has also ventured into filmmaking, directing the movie "Music." As an advocate for animal rights, Sia has received numerous awards and nominations throughout her career.

Moving to New York in 2005, Sia's career took a significant turn with albums like "Some People Have Real Problems" and "We Are Born." However, she preferred to work behind the scenes, writing and producing songs for other artists like Rihanna, Beyoncé, and David Guetta.
